

The History of Political Repression in the US & What it Means for Our Movements Today

Fri, Oct. 28, 3:30pm @ Occupy Philly Library

Since this nation's founding, dissident speech and progressive social movements in the U.S. have been met with repression, ranging from deportation of dissident immigrants and malicious prosecution of activists to infiltration of organizations and police violence against organizers. This workshop will trace that history, examining the tactics of repression and how movements have responded, with an emphasis on how our movements today can learn from history and defend themselves against the tactics of repression.

The History of Political Repression in the US & What it Means for Our Movements Today

Fri, Oct. 28, 3:30pm @ Occupy Philly Library

Since this nation's founding, dissident speech and progressive social movements in the U.S. have been met with repression, ranging from deportation of dissident immigrants and malicious prosecution of activists to infiltration of organizations and police violence against organizers. This workshop will trace that history, examining the tactics of repression and how movements have responded, with an emphasis on how our movements today can learn from history and defend themselves against the tactics of repression.

The History of Political Repression in the US & What it Means for Our Movements Today

Fri, Oct. 28, 3:30pm @ Occupy Philly Library

Since this nation's founding, dissident speech and progressive social movements in the U.S. have been met with repression, ranging from deportation of dissident immigrants and malicious prosecution of activists to infiltration of organizations and police violence against organizers. This workshop will trace that history, examining the tactics of repression and how movements have responded, with an emphasis on how our movements today can learn from history and defend themselves against the tactics of repression.

The History of Political Repression in the US & What it Means for Our Movements Today

Fri, Oct. 28, 3:30pm @ Occupy Philly Library

Since this nation's founding, dissident speech and progressive social movements in the U.S. have been met with repression, ranging from deportation of dissident immigrants and malicious prosecution of activists to infiltration of organizations and police violence against organizers. This workshop will trace that history, examining the tactics of repression and how movements have responded, with an emphasis on how our movements today can learn from history and defend themselves against the tactics of repression.

